A MESSAGE FROM OUR PRESIDENT

The big convention is almost here!

In roughly two weeks we hope to put our best foot forward and entertain the visitors at the American Hosta Society’s National Convention hosted by our society. Your attendance is requested at the National. For those who are new to the society, it’s quite an honor to host a National Convention. The last and only time our society has had that honor was in 2008, which was a very successful convention.

We are planning an even more successful convention this year. Even though our numbers are lower than expected, please do your best to show everyone who attends, our St. Louis Hospitality.

It has taken us a lot of hard work and time to get to this point and I want to thank everyone who has had a part in helping us get here. Everyone on the Convention Committee has put in hours and hours of time on this project and they should be commended. I also want to thank again our garden hosts, and our volunteers. Give yourselves a big pat on the back for a job well done. Just keep smiling and tell yourself you can rest when it’s over.

We saw the tour gardens on Saturday and they all looked lovely, so we should have a good showing for the attendees. Between those gardens, our open gardens, and the events planned, everyone should leave with a smile. So enjoy seeing old friends and making new ones.

It’s not too late!
Member Auction Coming in July

As you are busy in your gardens admiring and rearranging those ever growing clumps of hostas, think about separating out a couple of eyes for your member auction scheduled for July 17. Proceeds from this event help pay for your society’s speakers, holiday party and newsletter.

Many plants, such as H. ‘Sunspot’ pictured at right, have portions growing off to a side that can easily be removed with a shovel.

For some reason, when H. ‘Scooter’ emerged this spring, it appeared to be four distinct plants. Three of these divisions can be dug and potted, making the remaining plant more distinctive and giving it more room to grow.

H. ‘Wylde Green Cream’ has expanded beyond its boundaries and is infringing on the space of its neighbor. Use a shovel or two garden forks to sever and remove a section from the left side of this plant. It is not necessary to dig the entire plant out of the ground. Removing a portion will not affect the growth of the parent plant and will give your bed a tidier appearance.

There is still plenty of time for your division to recover before the auction. Place the newly potted pieces in a shady location and keep watered until July 17. One of the perks of belonging to a garden club is being able to obtain cultivars that aren’t readily available in local nurseries. Think about sharing a piece of a beloved hosta with your fellow hostaholics.

Convention Tour Garden Signs

Pre-convention tour garden hosts as well as the regular tour garden hosts need to bring back their Tour Garden signs to the hotel by Saturday’s evening banquet. If you are not planning to attend the banquet, make arrangements with someone to return your signs. Representatives from Indianapolis will take the signs home with them for use during their 2017 convention.
When visiting our convention tour gardens last Saturday I noticed that the Kousa Dogwoods (Cornus kousa) were still in bloom, while the blossoms of the more common Flowering Dogwoods (Cornus florida) have come and gone. Dogwood trees make excellent ornamental plants because of their beautiful spring blooms, their attractive foliage, red berries and interesting winter bark.

The kousa variety, sometimes called Chinese or Japanese Dogwood, adds a toughness and disease resistance lacking in its cousin the Flowering Dogwood. The kousa grows to 15 to 20 feet, has flakey tan and brown bark at maturity, and long-lasting white flowers. Actually, the flowers are quite small. The white “petals” are modified leaves called bracts that surround small, greenish-yellow insignificant flowers. These “flowers” appear after the tree leafs out and seem to rest on the top of the horizontal branches. The flowers are followed by pinkish red raspberry-like fruit which the birds love.

The kousa begins life with an upright form as in the picture upper right. As the tree matures its branches begin to droop growing out horizontally, giving the tree a spreading look. Under the canopy is a wonderful place to plant hostas.

The kousa variety is more resistant to the dogwood anthracnose disease, spot anthracnose, powdery mildew and bores than the flowering dogwoods.

The “Wolf Eyes” specimen I saw was stunning. Its gray-green leaves were accented with ivory along wavy margins. The ruffled texture of the foliage created an illusion of movement. Showy white star-shaped flowers covered the tree and with their bright green centers almost appeared to be staring back at you. It provided a flash of light in a darker corner of the garden. This variety is happiest in partial shade and moist, well-drained soil.

“Celestial Shadow” has the same dazzling white flowers, but the leaves emerge green with a generous margin of yellow. The foliage turns shades of orange and red in fall. This variety is a mutation of a cross between the flowering and kousa dogwoods.

“Venus” is a new hybrid Dogwood which is known for its fast growth and exceptionally large white flowers. The huge flowers are show stoppers, often exceeding six inches in diameter. The deep green foliage turns red to purple red in autumn. Besides its spectacular blooms, the tree is highly disease resistant, heat and humidity tolerant, demonstrates fine winter hardiness and is drought tolerant. Sounds perfect for our St. Louis climate.

Next time you’re thinking of adding a dogwood to your garden, give the kousa a look.
TIPS FOR SELECTING THE RIGHT HOSTA FOR YOUR GARDEN

The use of blue hostas next to light yellow hostas adds contrast. Planting one specimen hosta in an unexpected site provides a unique touch. Warm colors, such as gold and yellows are thought of as coming forward, while cool colors such as green and blue recede. Thereby, placing yellow and gold cultivars in front of blue hostas create an illusion of greater depth.

Yellow hostas are used to brighten up a dark corner or area of your garden. They are used to draw the visitor’s attention to that spot. Hostas can solve that bare spot or eyesore in the shady part of your yard or next to the deck that gets very little sun.

The use of bolder variegated hostas at the back of the garden seems to bring that area closer. Hostas offer continuity to the garden by being planted with and among ferns, Siberian iris, astilbe, etc. Hostas perform better (more pest resistant and sun tolerant) and become more beautiful each year. Hostas make great container plants on the patio. Place deeply variegated and highly fragrant hostas close to the viewer so that they can appreciate those characteristics more acutely. Generally, hostas grown in shade have fewer but larger leaves. Hostas are a perfect addition to the rock garden. In time their roots search out available soil. Just give them a little help the first year with some extra watering.

In choosing green hostas, keep in mind that green shades blend well with all other colors and are considered a ‘cool’ color. You’ll find greens with leaves that are shiny, powdery, light and dark green, round, lance shaped, heart shaped, oval, etc.

The blue hostas are also considered as ‘cool’ shades and are easy to blend with most any color. They add a good contrast when placed next to yellow hostas. To hold their deep blue color they need to be planted in shady areas. A blue hosta planted in a sunny area will tend to turn green by late summer.

Yellow to gold shades will really brighten up a dark area of your garden. In fact it will draw your garden visitor’s eye to that spot. Don’t overdo the use of yellow though, as too many seem to clutter up and confuse an otherwise beautiful garden. The yellow cultivars blend in well with all colors especially the blues and gold margined types.

Both the gold and white margined hostas produce variety when planted with the solid colors. The combinations and patterns of the variegated types planted with solid colors are subject to no limitations. Finally we have a grouping with unique variegations such as leaves with dark margins and lighter centers, or those with variegations in the spring turning to solid green by summer.
